Al Munro Elias

ONE day, some years ago, a salesman from the Standard Oil Co., entered the office of the Baseball Magazine. He had some criticism of the baseball playing rules. The editor listened, then suggested that he write out his criticism. "But," objected the salesman, "I am not a writer." "That won't matter," rejoined the editor, "your ideas can be put in shape all right so long as you have the dope."

The salesman was Al Munro Elias. His contributions to the Baseball Magazine, which appeared later, were his first effort in print. They served to give him the fever for baseball which has never left him. He felt that there was a field for a live salesman to create and sell baseball dope. No one that ever saw him will question that Elias was a born salesman. But—and that's the important thing—he had the dope.

From that chance beginning years ago has grown the Al Munro Elias Baseball Bureau. At first Al handled all details alone. Then, as his business increased, he added to his force and now employs several people the year 'round. Al has toured the country from coast to coast, infecting sporting editors everywhere with the virus of his tireless enthusiasm. He eats, breathes and fairly radiates baseball statistics. He will talk dope to you by the hour with the slightest provocation or with no provocation at all. Damon Runyon calls him the "figger filbert." The nickname is not inappropriate. Shakespeare probably didn't have Al in mind when he said, "Age cannot wither nor custom stale his infinite variety." But that was because he didn't know Al.

A few years ago and Al Munro Elias was known to perhaps five hundred people. Now millions daily read the batting averages of the "leading five" hitters of each big league, an idea that Al created and sold broadcast. His syndicated features are printed in scores of papers all over the country. Nor does he content himself merely with syndicate work. He collaborates with Pres. Heydler in getting out the official National League averages. He also gets out the International League averages. He has dug up dozens of facts from the forgotten and musty records and clothed them with new life. He has added to the reputation of many a ball player by proving that he had broken an established record. He has stimulated a vital public interest in pure statistics, a field once considered prosaic and dull.

This little volume presents the cream of Al's statistica researches for some years. It is the third edition of his work that has appeared in one volume at a popular price. The publishers of the Baseball Magazine, who started Al on his career have found that there is a field for such a volume. Next year, they will offer you a still better collection from the work of this live-wire dopest.

BASEBALL'S IMMORTALS

The Who's Who of Former Days

THOUSANDS of players have worn major league uniforms since the organized game began. Of this great army hundreds were exceptionally good but only a few were great. Here are ten brief biographies of baseball's super stars of former days.

a—Extra base hit not carried in summaries prior to 1881.

Baseball knew none greater than "Cap" Adrian Constantine Anson. Named after two Roman Emperors, he was truly a monarch in the realm of Swat. Anson was one of the real pioneers of America's national game, and he loved baseball with the devoutness of a man for his religion up to the day of his untimely death on April 14th last, when he was struck by the Great Umpire three days before his seventieth birthday.

Many were Anson's spectacular achievements on the diamond but his greatest feat was to hit over .300 in twenty out of twenty-two seasons. Only four other players in addition to "Cap" are members of that ultra select club of maulers, "The Three Thousand Hitters," namely men who collected over three thousand big league hits. The other four are Hans Wagner, Nap Lajoie, Ty Cobb and Sam Crawford.

Twice in his career Anson climbed into the select .400 batting class, hitting .421 in 1887 and .407 in 1879.

Like Babe Ruth, Sam Rice, Mike Donlin, Cy Seymour, Tris Speaker and other sturdy sons of swat, Jesse Burkett began his big league career as a pitcher. However, wildness in the box and knack for bounding balls off the outfield fences soon developed the fact that nature intended Jesse to be an outfielder, not a pitcher.

Until the 1922 season, Jesse stood alone as the only big leaguer who ever compiled three .400 averages. The New England Irishman hit .423 in 1896, .410 in 1897 and .402 in 1899.

The disputed hit of May 15th last, at the Polo Grounds gave Ty Cobb a chance to tie Burkett's three .400 marks. It is quite a coincidence, that Cobb's three .400 figures are quite practically the same as Burkett's. Ty's three official .400 marks are: .420 in 1911, .410 in 1912 and .401 in 1922.

Jesse collected over 200 hits in six years, ranking next to Keeler and Cobb in this department. He drove out over 200 hits in 1895 and 1896, missed 200 hits by one bingle in 1897 and then drove out over 200 hits for the next four years, just missing seven 200 hit years in succession.

Burkett led the National League three times with Cleveland in 1895, 1896, and with St. Louis in 1901. Burkett and Hornsby are the only Cardinals to lead the National League in batting.

With the exception of Babe Ruth, Ed. Delehanty, who reached his greatest fame with the old Phillies, could hit the ball harder than any man who ever lived. But where Ruth is a left-handed hitter, Delehanty's terrific clouts were slammed against the fences from a right-handed posture. When "Del" crashed a ball past an infielder everybody knew it was a hit.

Delehanty has another unique distinction. He is the only player who led both the National and American Leagues in batting. He topped the National League sluggers in 1899 with an average of .408, and four years later as a member of the Washington club he led the Johnson circuit at bat with a rating of .376.

Delehanty has one slugging record, which makes Babe Ruth green with envy whenever he stumbles across it in the records. On July 13, 1897, "Big Ed" socked Bill Terry of Chicago for four homers and a single in the same encounter, seventeen total bases in the same game. Delehanty, however, shares this record with Bobbie Lowe, who also collected four four-baggers and a single in a nine-inning contest. Ruth's best effort so far is two homers and a triple made off Dickie Kerr in 1920.

Delehanty belongs to that small and select class which has hit .400 on more than one occasion. George Sisler was the seventh man to get into that class, the others being Burkett, Cobb, Anson, Stovey, Thompson and Delehanty. Anson, Stovey and Thompson however, can thank one of their .400 averages to the freak year of record in 1887, when bases on balls counted as hits.

"Del" scored over one hundred runs in ten different seasons, seven in succession, and cracked out over two hundred hits three times in his career. He was one of the few players to close his career with over 3500 total bases.

The speed boy of them all was Billy Hamilton. He holds the National League scoring and stolen base records, statistics giving him clear title to every scoring and base running record.

Hamilton holds more records than you can shake a stick at. He carried in 196 runs for the Phillies in 131 games in 1894, which is carrying the scoring of runs into the wholesale department. Babe Ruth took a crack at that record in 1921, when he scored 177 runs in 152 games.

His record of 115 stolen bases with the Phillies in 1891 still remains the best mark in the National League. However, Billy beat that by two stolen bases in 1889, when he filched 117 bases for the Kansas City club of the old American Association, then a major league.

Keeler held the record for being the only batsman to collect over 200 hits in eight straight seasons, a record which Cobb tied during the 1922 season. Keeler, however, did it in successive years. He also scored over 100 runs per year eight consecutive times, from 1894 to 1901, the same years in which he made the 200 hits.

He holds the major league record for hitting in consecutive games as he hit safely in forty-four games in a row in 1892, when he was stopped by Frank Killen, a Pittsburgh left-hander. Sisler came within three games of this record last season.

Keeler holds the major league record for the most one-base hits, 199 with Baltimore in 1897. Keeler had held the record for the greatest number of basehits made in any one season in the National League until the past season when Hornsby beat the former record by seven. Rogers came through with 250 bingles last season.

Keeler's average of .432 in 1897 is the second highest in the National League and also in the Majors, excluding the joke averages when bases on balls were scored as hits.

In a game played with Baltimore on September 3, 1897, Keeler cracked out five singles and one triple in six times at bat.

All told Keeler scored 1719 big league runs, made more than 2000 hits, stole more than 500 bases and hit for over .300 fifteen years in succession, added to this, his records of eight successive years hitting 200 hits and scoring 100 runs, together with his major record of hitting safely his first 44 games in 1897, will shine forever. What a player!

Keeler hit for a batting percentage of .408, while on his record making hitting streak. After hitting safely his first 44 games of the 1897 season, Willie ran afoul lefty Frank Killen of the Pittsburghs on June 19th, and went hitless in four batting attempts.

Only three players, Keeler, Sisler and Cobb, enjoyed batting streaks of forty or more contests in the majors. Until last year Ty Cobb held the American League record, having hit safely in forty games for a percentage of .455. Cobb's mark was cast aside during 1922, when George Sisler of the Browns poled hits in forty-one successive contests for batting figure of .454.

During Lajoie's twenty-one years in big league baseball, he faced twenty-one major league clubs, and made the amazing record of hitting .300 or better against the entire twenty-one. His batting averages against these clubs follow: Baltimore Americans .513,

New York Nationals .422, Milwaukee Americans .411, St. Louis Nationals .377, Cincinnati Nationals .359, Brooklyn Nationals .349, Chicago Nationals .349, Pittsburgh Nationals .346, Chicago Americans .344, St. Louis Americans .338, Detroit Americans .334, Washington Americans .334, Cleveland Nationals .331, New York Americans .325, Philadelphia Americans .322, Boston Americans .321, Baltimore Nationals .314, Boston Nationals .313, Cleveland Americans .311, Louisville Nationals .308, Washington Nationals .300.

Though Larry was a robust hitter in the old National League, he did not win a batting leadership until he hopped to the American League. Heled Ban Johnson's new organization in 1901 with an average of .405, and repeated in 1903, 1904 and 1905. Oddly enough, in 1905, Lajoie and Wagner, Larry's most famous contemporary, each led his respective league with the same average, .355.

On May 10, 1897, Lajoie held his greatest batting carnival, socking "Red" Donohue for a single, double and two homers in five tries, a mighty good day's work. Nap hit .300 his first 11 straight years.

Cy Young was the most durable of all pitchers, but Christy Mathewson was the king of them all. We believe we take nothing from Radbourne, Rusie, Young, Johnson and Alexander, when we class Matty as the twirling star of all time.

Born in Factoryville, Penn., on August 12, 1880, Matty attracted attention in his teens playing scholastic and college ball in eastern Pennsylvania. He pitched for Bucknell and was a football player of no mean ability. In fact his ground-gaining ability and kicking ability featured a game which Bucknell played at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, some twenty odd years ago.

"The greatest ball player of all time." That's how John J. McGraw, baseball's foremost manager, regards Hans Wagner, the former "Flying Dutchman" of Barney Dreyfuss's Pirates.

"Wagner could do everything as well as anybody who ever played baseball, hit, run and field, and he knew his baseball," said McGraw.

Spectacular and brilliant as Cobb is, he is no greater than Wagner. Sisler may be as great over a span of years, Ruth, a special in home run hitting, cannot be compared with Wagner as an all-round player.

Hans was born in Mansfield, Pa., now Carnegie, on February 24, 1874, and was twenty years old when Ed Barrow, manager of the Paterson club of the Atlantic League, sold him for $2,100 to Barney Dreyfuss, then owner of the Louisville Nationals. Harry Pulliam, former president of the National League and then secretary of the Louisville club, put through the deal. Pulliam bid $100 more than was offered by Pittsburgh, so the player was knocked down to Louisville. Pittsburgh, however, was destined to get the famous star three years later when Dreyfuss purchased the Pirate franchise.

John Henry played 2785 games, went to bat 10,426 times, scored 1740 runs and whacked out 3430 hits for a total of 4880, all of them marks which have been approached by no other big leaguer. It was a big disappointment to Wagner that he couldn't wind up his career by hitting for an even 5,000 bases. He missed it only by twenty.

Wagner was the only player who ever led the National League batsmen four years in succession, and the only man who ever led it eight times. Cap Anson and Dan Brouthers each of whom led the parent major circuit four times, are Wagner's nearest rivals.

Like Sam Crawford, Hans was a barber and handy man in his early days, so they let him serve as a handy man on his different ball clubs. He broke in as an outfielder, and played most every position but the batteries before Fred Clarke located him permanently at short in Pittsburgh. During his 21 years in the National League, he had the splendid fielding average of .944. To show the volume of business Wagner transacted from day to day, he made 6520 putouts, 6390 assists and 720 errors, a total of 13,630 chances.

Despite his weight and clumsy appearance, he was one of the game's greatest base-runners. He stole a total of 720 bases, his best mark being 61 in 1907.

The stalwart oak of the pitching craft was old Cy Young. He is a product of the soil and a splendid line of pioneer ancestors put the power of a Samson into those massive shoulders and sinews of steel into that remarkable right arm.

A man of his mettle disdained a sore arm or the other chronic pitching complaints, and he had passed his forty-fifth milestone on the 1912 training trip of the Boston Nationals when he decided he had better surrender to old Father Time. But before Cy surrendered, he had pitched in twenty-two big league seasons and hung up a record of 508 victories, the only twirler to ever pass the 500 victory mark. In fact, Mathewson came the nearest to equalling Young's record, and Matty's right arm gave out after he had pitched 372 victories.

Denton Tecumseh Young was born on a farm near Gilmore, O., on March 22, 1867, and he was passed twenty-three when he started his major league career. He pitched for rural teams in Ohio, and when he signed with Canton in 1890 he reported in his overalls. Canton later in the season sold him to the old Cleveland National League team for $500.

Cy left many a mark for future generations of pitchers to shoot at in addition to his 508 victories. He is the only pitcher who won over thirty victories in five different years. In eleven other seasons he won over twenty.

He is the only pitcher who pitched better than .700 ball for three successive seasons, with the exception of Mathewson his percentage with the Red Sox being .756 in 1901,

.727 in 1902 and .757 in 1903. Young is the only pitcher who has twirled three no-hit games. The first was against Cincinnati on September 18, 1897, and the second against the Athletics on May 5, 1904, was a perfect game. The third, against the Yankees on June 30, 1908, was pitched when Young was forty-one years of age.

A baseball name which never will die in Louisville is that of "Pete" Browning, the original Louisville slugger. Louisville, whose growth in population was insufficient to retain its position on the big league map, still lives in the baseball past. When Louisville fans gather together they still speak of the days of "Pete" Browning, Hans Wagner and Fred Clarke.

But Browning is the fondest memory, as the great portion of his twelve year career as a slugger was spent in churning out base-hits for the special edification of Louisville fandom.

It also is well that other fans should know more about Browning. His lifetime batting average ranks third among the players of all time. In his twelve year career with the old American Association, Players' League and National League he hit .353.

Only two other players in the history of baseball, both active at present, have greater lifetime averages than Browning. Cobb leads with .373, Sisler is second with .361, and Browning third with .353.

A famous fence buster of the days when first basemen were hired solely for proficiency with the ash was Dan Brouthers. Dan still is employed at the Polo Grounds as a watchman, and those sturdy shoulders which gave him much of his walloping power, have not shrunk any with the passing of a quarter of a century. Dan still packs quite a punch.

Dan was a member of the original "Big Four," that great quartet of sluggers sold by the old Buffalo Nationals to Detroit in 1886, Dan Brouthers, Hardy Richardson, Jim White and Charley Rowe. How those boys could sock!

Brouthers, whose real name is Dennis, was a member of Detroit's only National League championship team, the club of 1887. He was its leading hitter with an average of .419, but that was the gift year when bases on balls went for hits. What would Babe Ruth have hit in 1921 with 144 extra bases on balls recorded as hits?

Dan plied his slugging art in many ports during the seventeen years that he abused the pitching of his day. He played with Troy, Buffalo, Detroit, Boston, Brooklyn, Baltimore, Louisville and Philadelphia in the National League, Boston in the Players' League and Boston in the American Association. In Baltimore, he was a member of the Oriole Champions of 1894.

But when Brouthers got through, he had compiled the fourth highest batting average of all time, a rating for seventeen years of .348. The four leading hitters of all time are, Cobb, .373; Sisler, .358; Browning, .353; Brouthers, .348.

Few veterans of the past ever held the grip of the fans of his city as Fred Clarke did in Pittsburgh when he was playing left field and managing the crack Pirate teams, which won National League pennants for the Smoky City in 1901, 1902, 1903 and 1909. Even the picturesque Wagner would have had difficulty in beating out the aggressive Bucaneer chief in a popularity contest.

Clarke's method of crashing into the big league was typical of his entire career. He broke in with a rush. In his first big league game, Clarke banged out five hits, four singles and a triple in five times at bat. This is one record which probably will stand for some time, a rookie breaking in with five hits in his initial game.

Clarke got his five hits off "Canon Ball" Gus Weyhing, pitcher for the Philadelphia Nationals, on June 30th, 1894, and those who predicted a great batting career for the young Kansan did not miss their guess by much.

Fred hit over .300 in eleven of his eighteen seasons as a regular, rising to .406 in 1897. Five times in his career he scored over 100 runs a season, his big scoring years being 1897, 1898, 1899, 1901 and 1902.

The hefty Kansan is one of the few big leaguers, who completed his playing career with over 3700 total bases. He had the unique distinction of going to bat 601 times in 1899. It is very rare for any player, star or ordinary performer, to have 600 official times at bat. Cobb and Lajoie each appeared officially at bat 600 times only once in their long careers.

An old-timer who could sock with the best was Hughie Duffy, in his younger days, one of Boston's most illustrious sluggers. Hughie's batting average of .438 with the old Boston Red Stockings in 1894 is the highest mark ever achieved by any major league batsman, with the exception of the freak year when bases on balls counted as hits, the year producing fifteen .400 basemen.

For a man of his size, Duffy was one of the hardest hitters the game ever produced, as he was a batsman who smashed his drives for terrific liners, and his hits totalled many bases. In 1894, when he led the National League in batting his total bases reached the amazing figure of 372.

Hughie also was a marvel on the base-paths and as a run-scorer. He was one of the few players to steal over five hundred bases, and in 1891 he filched eighty-three sacks.

He scored 1528 runs during his career, scoring over one hundred runs in seven successive seasons and in nine years out of his fourteen. He fetched in 161 runs with the Chicago Players League team in 1890, one more than he carried in for Boston in 1894 when he compiled his record-smashing average of .438.

Thompson played with Detroit Nationals from 1885 including 1888. With the Philadelphia Nationals from 1889 including 1898 and the Detroit Americans he played 8 games with in 1906.

Sam Thompson was baseball's greatest wholesaler in home runs until Ruth, the phenom, came along the big league pike. Thompson's 127 major league home runs constituted a big league record until Ruth passed it on June 23, 1921. The Babe's 128th home run was a titanic smash off Herb Thormahlen into the right center field bleachers in Boston, one of the historic homers of Fenway Park. Ruth now is considerable ahead of Thompson's record of former years.

Like the Babe, Slugging Sam was a left-handed hitter, who pulled his hits into right field. Many homers of Thompson's big collection landed in Broad Street, Philadelphia, via the air route over the right field wall.

Sam hit over 400 twice, yet never led the National League. He hit 406 in 1887, when bases on balls were scored as hits, and, 403 seven years later. In the seasons of 1893, 1894 and 1895, Thompson, averaged 390 at bat, yet he always was denied the crown for the league's leading batsman,

In the season of 1887, Thompson fought a spring campaign, which probably never has been equalled. He started in the season by hitting safely in his first twenty-one games, during which he bagged 47 hits for a total of 84 bases, giving him a batting average of .465

In addition to twice going over 400, Thompson hit over 300 in ten seasons, and ten times in his career he scored 100 runs or more. He was a mighty slugger, four times hitting for a total of 300 or more bases. Twice he bagged over forty doubles and twice over twenty triples. His best home run mark was twenty-one, made in 1889.

Jimmy Collins was the greatest third baseman of all time. That is a statement, which few will contradict. In picking an all star team for all time, several positions may be in doubt, but there is practical unanimity among baseball men in selecting Collins for the so-called hot corner of the infield.

There probably never was a third baseman, who had the knack for roaming over the ground as well as Collins, and baseball has seen many fielding marvels at third, Nash, McGraw, Bradley, Lord and Groh. But Collins just ranged a little more territory than any other.

Collins also was a hard, dangerous hitter, getting many base-knocks of the extra-base type, while he was a fair but smart base-runner. With the exception of a few months spent with Louisville in 1895, and his closing years in Philadelphia, Collins's entire big league career was devoted to Boston. He played on four championship teams in the Hub, then National League pennant winners of 1897 and 1898 and the Red Sox American League champions of 1903 and 1904, Jimmy was playing manager of the latter team.

Collins holds several major league records. In 1899, he handled 601 chances at third base for the Boston Nationals, the greatest number ever handled by any third baseman. In 1900, his last in the National League, he took care of 252 putouts, another record for a third baseman. In 1904, he played 156 games at third base for the Red Sox, a record shared by Ed Foster of the Washingtons in 1914.

When the American League invaded Boston in 1901, Collins was appointed manager of the new Red Sox team, and he induced many of his fellow Boston National players to cast their lot with the new league. Collins' early years as a playing manager were quite successful, as his teams of 1901 and 1902 finished well up, and he won the pennants in 1903-04, topping off the 1903 season with a world's series victory over the Pirates.

Collins' team of veterans broke in 1906, when the club lost 20 straight games, and Jimmy was deposed as manager and traded to Philadelphia for Jack Knight in 1907. However, he then had taken on weight and lost much of his speed, his career coming to an end after two seasons with the Athletics.

Few batsmen who ever lived could "paste" a ball against the right field fences with more pepper than Wahoo Sam Crawford, the slugging tonsorial artist from Nebraska. It was too bad, however, that Sam didn't come up a decade later. What he would have done to the modern "Jackrabbit" baseball would have been something pretty.

Old Pop Time is having a difficult time of it in returning Wahoo Samuel to the barber chair. Sam left the American League in 1917 after knocking around major league diamonds for nineteen years. The old legs were having a lot of difficulty in standing up, but what California climate did for Sam is a story in itself. At forty-two, he still is slapping them out for Los Angeles. In 1921, he took part in 175 games for the Angels, and finished with a rating of .318.

Crawford never led the American or National Leagues, but he hit over .300 in eleven big league seasons out of nineteen. Thrice in his career he scored over 100 runs and in 1911 he cracked out over 200 hits. When playing regularly, Crawford seldom was out of the line-up with an injury, and in fifteen successive years, from 1901 to 1915 inclusive, he was at bat 523 or more times.

He ranks fifth among the players who took part in the greatest number of successive games, as he played in 472 successive games from April 10, 1913 to April 18, 1916. Only Scott, Pinckney, Luderus and Eddie Collins had longer streaks.

Crawford ranks third among the batsmen who have hit for over 4000 bases during their major league careers. The first five players in this department rank as follows: Wagner, Cobb, Crawford, Lajoie, Beckley. "Cap" Anson also would be in this class but for the fact that total base records were not kept in the early years of the League.

The George Kelly of an earlier era of Giants was Roger Connor, first baseman of the "We are the People" Giant World's Champions of 1883 and 1889. And Roger could take his toe hold at the plate, and slam them out just as far as the husky California nephew of old Bill Lange, who now graces first base for McGraw's title-holders.

Among other things Roger Connor, the first baseman, was wholesaler in runs. He ranks fourth among the major league players of all time in carrying runs across the plate, and his total output is only seventeen behind that of Wagner. The four leading run-getters of major league history are as follows: Wagner, 1740; Cobb, 1723; Keeler 1719 and Connor 1713.

Connor lasted a full twenty years in the majors, nineteen of them being spent in the National League. His only year of defection came in 1890, when Roger, with most members of the Giant champions, left John B. Day and Jim Mutrie flat and threw in their lot with the Players' League.

Roger eventually drifted away from New York, and landed in St. Louis in 1894. To show how he felt about getting away from the Giants, on June 1st, 1895, Roger slapped Jouett Meekin, one of New York's prize twirlers, for six hits, totalling ten bases, in six times at bat. While on this batting tear, Connor whaled out eight hits in eight times at bat, as he had made two in his last two times up in the preceding game.

Connor collected twelve 300 averages in his twenty years and has a lifetime batting average of .318. He scored over 100 runs in eight seasons, reaching his best mark, 134, in 1890, the year he spent with the Players League.

There was no more famous bird on the old Orioles than the brick-topped Hughie Jennings, former "Ee-yah" manager of the Detroit Tigers and now assistant manager of the World's Champion Giants

Jennings was not a natural hitter when he came into the big leagues, and weakness with the mace brought about his transfer from the Louisville to the Baltimore club. They taught Hughie to hit and run bases on that famous congress of hitters and speed boys Jennings hit .192 and stole one base in 1893, his third year in the majors. Two years later, he hit .386 and stole 60 bases. What an improvement!

Jennings was born at Pittston, Pa., on April 2nd, 1870, and broke into the majors at the age of twenty-one, playing his first game on June 1st, 1891, at Louisville, the Colonels playing the Washington club. Hugh started in this big league career with three sacrifices and a perfect day at short.

Jennings' average jumped to .332 in 1894, leaped to .386 in 1895 and reached its high mark of .397 in 1896. Hugh also became a dreaded base-runner, and in the three years from 1895 to 1897 he stole 193 bases half of the bases that he pilfered during his big league career.

Hughie hit over .300 in seven of his twelve years as a big leaguer, scored over 100 runs five years in succession and twice cracked out over 200 hits a year. He closed his big league career with a life-time average of .314.

Hugh Jennings holds the major league record for getting hit in a season having 49 to his credit which he compiled in 1896. He also is tied with Evans of the St. Louis Nationals and Daniels of the Yankees for the most hits by a pitcher in a single game having a total of 3 when with Baltimore on May 11, 1894, he was hit a trio of times by Philadelphia's pitchers.

Willie Keeler, Joe Kelley and Steve Brodie, what an outfield! The departed Keeler always will be remembered as the most famous player of this trio, but Kelley never was far behind the illustrious Wee Willie.

Where Keeler beat out his bunts or dropped his hits back of the infield, slugging Joe crashed his bingles off the fences. In the three years that the Orioles won their pennants, 1894, 1895 and 1896, Kelley hit .391, .370 and .370 respectively, and stole 45, 59 and 90 bases. That's the kind of a player Joe Kelley was.

Slugging Joe had one batting day in 1894, which deserves a chapter of its own in base ball history. In a double header played with Cleveland, Kelley collected nine hits for a total of fifteen bases in nine official times at bat, scored seven runs.

Kelley put in his entire big league career with the National League, and in eleven consecutive years he hit for better than .300. Though he dropped out of the 300 class after he assumed the worries of managing the Cincinnati club, his seventeen year National League batting average was .318.

Kelley scored over 100 runs in six seasons, five of them being in succession. In 1894, the year of Baltimore's first championship, he reached the high mark of 167 runs

Christy Mathewson has been called the greatest pitcher of all time. Others are unwilling to concede that Cy Young ever had a superior in the twirling craft. Walter Johnson, too, has his constituents. But when it came to sheer ability in one season, Charley Radbourne's work of 1884 stands so far above the record of any other pitcher in a single season that there is no comparison.

Matty may have known more about the science of pitching than Radbourne; Young unquestionably remained longer in the majors; Johnson possibly had greater speed around 1912 and 1913, but "Old Hoss" Radbourne is the only pitcher in baseball, who ever turned in 62 victories a season.

Providence won the National League championship in 1884 with 84 victories and 28 defeats for a percentage of .750. Radbourne's contribution to that pennant victory was 62 victories and 12 defeats for a percentage of .838. The "Old Hoss" practically pitched Providence to a pennant single-handed that year, as Sweeney, the other pitcher quit the club in midseason, leaving Radbourne to do all the work. And he was capable of doing it.

In one month's time, from August 6th to September 7th, 1884, Radbourne reeled off eighteen straight victories, pitching all of the games on his team's schedule. Providence won twenty straight games at the same time, Sweeney contributing two victories before quitting the team. That was the major league record for victories until the Giants made their record run of twenty-six victories in 1916.

While turning in his winning streak of eighteen straight the "Old Hoss" pitched five shutouts.

On August 21, 1883, Radbourne pitched the most one-sided shutout in the history of the National League, shutting out the Phillies by a score of 26 to 0. On July 25, 1883, he twirled a no-hit game against Cleveland.

It is interesting to compare Radbourne's best three years with the best three years of Mathewson, Young, Johnson, and Alexander. While Matty, Young and Alexander have slightly better percentages, in their three best year period, Radbourne won 142 games against 96 for Mathewson, 94 for each Johnson and Alexander and 91 for Young.

As a player Baker has never received the credit due him. He had a sort of awkward style in the field, that many got the idea that he was a cumbersome third baseman. Yet the records show that he usually was near the top of his position in fielding, and season after season handled more chances at third base than any other player at that difficult position.

Baker packed the hardest punch of any man who ever played third base. He was a crack home run hitter before the era of the lively ball and restricted pitching legislation. When Baker was at the height of his career, any player who could knock out ten or twelve home runs had no difficulty in leading his league.

Baker led the American League in hitting home runs in 1911, 1912, 1913 and 1914, with 9, 10, 12, and 8 home runs respectively.

One of the rarest feats of baseball history was performed by Clarence "Ginger" Beaumont on July 22nd, 1899, the player's first season in the National League. Beaumont made his six singles in as many times at bat, and scored after each hit. In addition to his six hits and six runs, he found time to steal a base on his busy afternoon.

Though "Ginger" Beaumont won most of his fame while playing center field on the Pirate champions of 1901, 1902, and 1903, he broke in with the Pittsburgh club as a first baseman in 1899. However, Fred Clarke soon concluded that the young slugger from Wisconsin was better fitted for outfield work, and "Ginger" developed into a rattling good center fielder. He was born in Rochester, Wisconsin, in the centennial year of 1876.

When at the top of his game, Beaumont was one of the foremost hitters in the National League. "Ginger," Hans Wagner, and Fred Clarke supplying most of the dynamite for the early Pirate champions.

Clarence cut in on Hans Wagner's province in 1902, and set the pace for National League hitters with a mark of .357.

However, Beaumont's greatest year was in 1903, when he led the National League players in scoring runs with 137, and knocked out the most hits, 209. He also had the most hits in 1902, 194 bingles. In the four years from 1900 to 1903, inclusive, Beaumont scored 463 runs, an average of 116 runs a season.

There have been numerous celebrated Indians in America's national sport, but the talented Chippewa, "Chief" Albert Bender unquestionably tops the list.

Like Jack Coombs, who later shone on the same Athletic twirling staff with Bender, the young Indian started in his big league career with a shutout. No less a celebrity than Clark Griffith bowed to the skill of the young "aboriginee." Griffith then managed the Yankees, and took his turn in the twirler's box. Bender shut out "Griff's" all-star team with four hits.

With the possible exception of Rusie and Walter Johnson, it is doubtful if any other pitcher ever got more speed on a baseball than "Chief" Bender. In the first game of the 1911 world's series, which Bender lost to Mathewson 2 to 1, on a fumble by Eddie Collins, he pitched one of the classics of world's series warfare. Giant players said his fast ball looked the size of a pea as it came sailing across the plate; he struck out eleven of the Giants in that game.

Bender was the leading pitcher of the American League in 1910, 1911, and 1914. In the latter season, he had 17 victories against 3 defeats for a percentage of .850, one of the highest ever hung up in the American League. However, Bender fell down badly in the Athletic-Braves world's series of that year, and Mack never forgave him for his failure to keep in condition in that series.

Bender pitched a no-hit game against Cleveland on May 12, 1910, only one man Terry Turner, reaching base. The tow-head was promptly picked off trying to steal after extracting a base on balls.

Bender is one of the most versatile men who ever played professional baseball, being as skillful with a shotgun or billiard cue as with a base ball. He is a well informed man, a splendid conversationalist, and an expert on jewels and diamonds.

Like Babe Ruth, Jesse Burkett, Cy Seymour and other famous hitters, Mike Donlin the popular "Turkey Mike" of Broadway fifteen years ago, started life as a pitcher. It was as a twirler that he broke into the National League with the St. Louis Cardinals on July 19, 1899. Mike relieved Sudhoff in a game against Boston, and failed to hit safely against the veteran, "Kid" Nichols in two attempts.

McGraw and Robinson came to St. Louis in 1900, and thereafter the career of the young slugger was closely associated with that of the famous manager of the Giants. McGraw cast his fortunes with the young American league in 1901, taking the management of the Baltimore Americans, and "Turkey Mike" enlisted with the new Orioles as an outfielder. Donlin became one of the batting leaders of the new league, and enjoyed a great season, hitting .340, scoring 108 runs and stealing 32 bases.

Donlin jumped back to the National League in 1902, landing with the Reds, but a deal engineered by McGraw brought Donlin to New York in 1904, and Mike played center field for McGraw's first championship clubs, the Giant pennant winners of 1904 and 1905.

In 1905, Donlin shared the affections of the New York public with Christy Mathewson. Where the quiet, taciturn Mathewson shone in the defense, the fiery, aggressive Michael was the Giant's greatest offensive player. He led his league in scoring runs with 124, batted third with .356, and had developed into a splendid center fielder.

Donlin unquestionably was one of the best natural hitters in the game, and had he taken baseball more seriously in his early years, he would have been ranked with the best. As it is, he hit over .300 in ten of his twelve seasons in the majors and finished his career with a lifetime batting average of .334.

One of his greatest individual performances was with the American League, for on June 24th, 1901, while playing with Baltimore, he cracked out six hits, two triples, two doubles and two singles, off pitcher Miller of Detroit in six times at bat. It was one of the foremost batting exploits in the majors.

A player whose name is only a memory to the present generation of fans, but who left a deep impress on the game was Jimmy Ryan, slashing outfielder of the Chicago Nationals in the late eighties and nineties, and a player who stood the gaff of the big league strife for a period of eighteen years.

In his younger days, Ryan was a player who loved to play his pranks on "ole Cap Anson," but after the Brotherhood War, Jimmy was Anson's hitting ace. He was one of the few members of the great Chicago team of the late eighties, who stuck to Anson and his White Stockings during the Brotherhood insurrection.

Ryan's record as a big leaguer is one of the most famous of any of the old time stars. He played in over 2,000 big league encounters, scored over 1600 runs, cracked out over 2500 hits, totalling nearly 3700 bases, and stole 440 bases. That's accomplishing something during a baseball lifetime. There are very few players who stole 440 bases. They can be counted on your two hands.

Ryan's big league activities were limited to Chicago and Washington. Way back in 1886, Ryan spent his first National League season with the Washington and Chicago clubs. He remained a Cub until the National League War. He was idle in 1901, but completed his career with two seasons with the Washington Americans.

When, on that fatal, foggy morning of December 8, 1923, the third section of the Twentieth Century stove in the rear car of the second section as though it were an egg shell, it snuffed out the life of one of the most lovable personalities ever connected with professional baseball.

Donovan early attracted attention as one of the "park sparrows," the name given to the Philadelphia youngsters who romp over the numerous diamonds at Fairmount Park. His early minor league career was with the Pawtucket, R. I., Waterbury and Hartford clubs.

He joined the Washington National League club in the spring of 1898, and twirled his first big league game against Brooklyn on April 22nd, 1898. A big broad-shouldered youth, with terrific speed, Bill had difficulty with his control, and became known to base ball as "Wild Bill" Donovan.

In the four years of Detroit's greatest American League success, 1907, 1908, 1909 and 1910, Donovan won 69 games for the Tigers and lost only 25 for a percentage of .734, sufficient proof as to what an asset he was to Jennings.

Donovan's greatest game was the memorable 17 inning tie game against the Athletics on September 30, 1907, at the time that the Tigers and Athletics were running neck and neck for the American League pennant. A double header was scheduled, and the Athletics got an early 7 to 1 lead on Donovan. However Jennings kept Bill on the job, and a home run by Cobb eventually tied the score at 8-8 in the ninth. Each team scored a run in the eleventh, and the game had to be called on account of darkness at the end of the seventeenth inning with the score at 9-9. Donovan's come-back, after his early pasting was one of the most remarkable pitching feats of its kind ever recorded in baseball. The tie game enabled Detroit to leave Philadelphia with a three point lead, and virtually gave the Tigers the pennant.

New York has had many celebrated characters during its baseball history, but few who left a firmer impress on the game than "Buck" Ewing. Ewing was one of the greatest all-around players of all time, and one of baseball's most distinguished catchers.

Many men, who speak with authority, regard him as the greatest catcher in the history of the sport. New York fans, whose memories run back to the eighties, say that Ewing was in a class by himself, and never has had an equal since. Old time fans, of course, always will prate of the wonders of the past, but no fan, past or present, will deny the greatness of "Buck" Ewing.

Ewing made his National League entry with the Troy team in 1881. Imagine Troy, N. Y., in the National League today. "Buck" moved down the Hudson when the Troy franchise was shifted to New York in 1883, and for years he remained one of the stellar attractions of the Giants.

Ewing had one of those hair-trigger brains, and was a player with a cunning far ahead of his time. He had perfect co-ordination between mind and body, and it was the boast of the old-time New York fans that "Buck" never missed a man at the plate.

"Buck" was a hard and dangerous hitter, and in ten of his fifteen seasons as a regular he was a .300 man. As a catcher he also was a splendid base-runner, and three times he stole as many as 53 bases.

In this era of tail end ball in Philadelphia, the veteran Quaker City fan again lives over the memories of the past, the years when the Phillies had such celebrated maulers as Nap Lajoie, Ed Delehanty and Elmer Flick to make life a burden for opposing pitchers.

Flick's place in baseball history perhaps is not as well established as that of "Larruping Larry" and "Dell," but Elmer properly belongs to the great outfielders of all time. Flick wasn't a big man, but he swung from the shoulder, and when he tore a ball into right field it sailed like a shot from Ruth's cannon.

Elmer also was a splendid base-runner and fielder, one of the fleetest base-runners of his day and a clever run-getter.

Flick broke into the National League with the Phillies on April 26th, 1898, and the young right fielder started in like a cyclone. He cracked Fred Klobedanz of Boston for two hits in three times up and scored a run. In his first five big league games, he drove out 6 hits in 13 times at bat for an average of .462.

Flick almost snatched the National League batting crown from Hans Wagner in 1900, Elmer's third season in the league. The Philadelphia player lost out by two points, hitting .378 against Wagner's .380.

From 1902 to 1910, his last year in the majors, Flick was an American Leaguer and one of the most popular of the Forest City players. While Elmer never hit as hard in the American League as in the National, he led the Johnson circuit in stealing bases in 1904 with 42 steals and in 1906 he led the league in scoring runs with 98. The same season he led the American League in hitting triples with 22. He also led in three base hits in 1905 and 1907.

Along the corridor of Time, baseball has known many quick thinkers, McGraw, Keeler, Evers, Cobb, Collins and a host of others. But baseball never knew a man who thought faster than the great "King" Kelly, one of the foremost diamond stars of the ages.

What a card a man like Kelly would be in the modern game of to-day! He was picturesque and was full of color. The game is so standardized that we are unable to see another "King" Kelly.

Kelly could do anything on a ball field, catch, play the outfield or the infield. Though not particularly fast, he was a famous base-runner, stealing as high as 84 bases in 1887. He pulled more stuff at bat and on the bases than any man up to his time. Under the old single umpire system, he literally got away with "murder." He thought nothing of tearing clear across the infield, in going from first to third, catching the umpire watch another play.

Kelly's greatest fame was won with the Chicago and Boston clubs, when he was the battery mate of the great John Clarkson. In 1887, Chicago startled the baseball world by selling the famous "King," the Ty Cobb of his day, to Boston for $10,000. A year later, after Kelly became manager of the Bostons, he persuaded the Hub owners to spend $10,000 more for Clarkson, Kelly and Clarkson then won additional glory as the "Twenty Thousand Dollar Battery," a fabulous sum baseball in that era.

The "King" lasted sixteen years in the big show, and ended his baseball career with a .313 batting average. Kelly was an easy liver, and belonged to that free and easy type of the eighties and early nineties who would drink with any one who would set them up. He flickered out early for a man of his marked ability, and died before he reached his fiftieth year.

"Cy" Seymour belongs to that big class of slugging outfielders, who started their major league careers as pitchers. Jesse Burkett, George Van Haltren, Babe Ruth, "Reb" Russell, Joe Wood, Jack Graney and a host of others belong to that class. Ruth, however, was the only one of this group who turned outfielder while still at the top of his pitching form.

The others were too wild to be of any use as big league twirlers or their arms gave out early, as was true of Wood and Russell. Seymour belonged to the former class. He had speed to burn, and probably had as much stuff on the ball as any left-hander in the history of the game, with the possible exception of Rube Waddell.

But "Cy" never could tell where his fast ball would go. If he had luck, it would dart over the corners of the plate as intended. Just as often it would land in the grandstand. Seymour thought nothing of dishing out a dozen bases on balls a game. But he could hit, and hitting earned him more money than he ever could have made at pitching.

Seymour broke in with the Giants on August 24th, 1896, in a contest with Louisville played in New York, and though the young southpaw was quite liberal in the way of passes, he emerged victorious by a score of 8 to 6. He fanned five of the Colonels.

His years with the Reds were his most successful in baseball, as he hit over .300 in four successive years, and in 1905 he won the batting crown from the great Honus Wagner by hitting .377. Wagner hit .363 that season. "Cy" was the only player to challenge the spectacular Honus's batting supremacy between the years of 1903 and 1909, inclusive.

Largely on the strength of Seymour's reputation as batting champion the Giants purchased Cy from Cincinnati in 1906 for $10,000. Imagine buying a batting champion for $10,000 to-day! And the New York club was very proud of the reckless manner in which it spent its cash. For years the cancelled Seymour check, surrounded by a neat frame, hung proudly in the Giant offices.

AMERICAN LEAGUE LIFETIME BATTING FEATURES

Ty Cobb continues to show the way to the lifetime batters of both major leagues with a mark of .370. Cobb sure is the wonder man of modern professional baseball; he now holds the record for the most base hits ever made by a major league player during his career with 3455 bingles, just nosing out Hans Wagner's old mark by 25 hits. Ty also scored the most runs of any player who ever lived, crossing the plate 1826 times. Cobb made the most three base hits in the American League having 259 triples to his credit. Sam Crawford made 312 three baggers, but 62 were made while Sam was a member of the National League.

To Tris Speaker goes the honor of the two base hit king of all time as the Indian manager rapped out 604 doubles since his entrance into the American League.

Babe Ruth of the Yankees is the home run king of all time with 238 four baggers to his credit.

Eddie Collins, the peerless second baseman of the White Sox, is the leading sacrifice hitter with 441, while Ty Cobb shows the way along the base paths with 820 thefts.

LONGEST MAJOR LEAGUE BATTING STREAKS

ONLY four major league players, Willie Keeler, Bill Dahlen, George Sisler and Ty Cobb, possess records of hitting safely in forty or more consecutive games. The table below best illustrates the work of this quartet of master hitters, while enjoying their healthy streaks of continuous hitting.

Player	Started	G	A.B.	R	H	P.C.	Stopped by Pitcher
Keeler	April 22, 1897.....	44	201	49	82	.408	June 18, by Frank Killen

FEATURES ON MAJOR LEAGUE BATTING CHAMPIONS OF ALL TIME

The following table tells each National League leading batter from 1876 to 1923 inclusive, and also the leading batter in the American League from 1900 to 1923 inclusive, arranged in the order of the best batting average.

Of the seventy-three sluggers listed in the table, thirty-three are right-handed and forty bat left-handed.

Fifteen leading batters hit for better than a .400 percentage, five hit .390 or better eleven sluggers reached a mark as good as .380, ten did as well as .370, three hit better than .360, ten reached the .350 mark, three hit as good as .340, eleven did better than .330, and five hit between .320 and .330.

The race for the league's leading batter occurred during the season of 1892, when Clarence Childs of Cleveland just nosed out Dan Brouthers of the Brooklynns by the scantiest of margins, the actual figures being, Childs, .33514 and Brouthers .33503.

One of the oddest things that has ever happened in major league baseball was the records compiled by Dan Brouthers for the Buffalo Nationals in 1883 and Roger Connor for the New York Nationals in 1885. In 97 games in 1883 Brouthers went to bat 420 times and made 156 hits, while Connor in 1885 played 110 contests for New York, came to bat 455 times and rapped out 169 hits, the odd part about these two players' records are that if their batting averages are figured out to the sixth decimal or more they will have exactly the same mark as shown below.

Year	Player and Club	League	G.	A.B.	H.	P.C.
1883	Dan Brouthers, Buffalo	National.....	97	420	156	.371428
1885	Roger Connor, New York	National.....	110	455	169	.371428

Ty Cobb led his league in batting oftener than any player ever topped his circuit. Ty was in front of the bunch on twelve different occasions, Hans Wagner is next in line with eight leading years. Five players led their league four different years, Cap Anson, Willie Keeler, Dan Brouthers, Nap Lajoie and Roger Hornsby. Hornsby's league leading were consecutive years.

Jesse Burkett led his league three times, while four players were at the head of their circuit twice, as follows, Billy Hamilton, Ed Delehanty, Jake Daubert and Ed Roush.

Ed Delehanty made an odd record by leading both leagues in batting, leading the National League in 1899 with a mark of .408 and topping the sluggers of the American League in 1902 with a batting record of .376.

FEATURES

George Sisler holds the major league record for the most hits made in a single season, 257, while Rogers Hornsby's mark of 250 hits made during the 1922 season is the most ever made by a National League player.

Ty Cobb and the late Willie Keeler jointly hold the record for most number of seasons to garner over two hundred hits, each one having gotten two hundred or more hits in eight seasons. Ty Cobb failed by eleven hits last year to reach the two hundred mark and break the tie.

Three new names were added to the list, making a total of 63 major league players who have rapped out 200 hits a season at least once during their careers. The newcomers are "Pie" Traynor of the Pirates, Charley Jamieson of the Indians, and "Jigger" Statz of the Cubs.

FEATURES ON LEADING BATTERS OF ALL LEAGUES IN 1923

To Mose Solomon of the Hutchinson Kansas League club of the Southwestern League goes the honor of compiling the highest batting average of any player in organized ball in 1923, Mose finishing the past season with a mark of .421, before John McGraw gave the young Hebrew slugger a chance to show his wares with the New York Giants, Mose was recently given his release by McGraw to be farmed out to the American Association.

Paul Strand the rejuvenated pitcher who turned to outfielding when he found out his ability as a batter played the most games of any batter who led a league, Strand was in 194 games, he also faced the most pitching, going to bat 825 times and pounded out the most hits 325 a new record for organized ball.

Craig of Greenville of the East Texas League has the lowest mark of any batter who topped his circuit, leading his league with a batting average of .328.

A FREAK DOUBLE HEADER

A doubleheader was played May 24th, 1923, at Montreal, between the Quebec and Montreal clubs of the Eastern Canada League. Both games went nine innings, only one pitcher hurled for each club in both games, only nine players were in the lineup for each contest, and the same players engaging in the first game, took part in the second tilt. Oddly too, John Jones, pitching for Montreal blanked Bob Schwab, hurling for Quebec, in the first contest, while Schwab returned the compliment in the closing tilt by shutting out Jones.

Of the pitchers listed above, these throw left handed; Smith, Cole, Warmoth, Pennock, Shaute, Bayne, Danforth, Morgridge, Cvesgros, Zachery, Pruett, Edwards, Brillheart, Heimach, Francis and Walberg.

The hurlers with ten or more shutouts, in order are; Johnson 101, Covelskie, Shawkey and Bush, 30 each, Mays 24, Faber 23, Daus 21, Shocker, Quinn, Morton and Mogridge, 19 each, Pennock 18, and Embke 11.

Walter Johnson won the most games, 353, Johnson also suffered the most defeats, 243.

Ten of the twirlers listed above belong in the century winners class, they being in order; Johnson 353, Daus 183, Faber 166, Shawkey 162, Covelskie 158, Bush 153, Mays 151, Shocker 125, Quinn 111, and Mogridge 101. A total of seven hurlers suffered more than one hundred defeats, as follows: Johnson 243, Daus 157, Bush 135, Shawkey 112, Faber 109, Covelskie 108, and Mogridge 102.

Johnson won 58 games from Detroit, the most times an American League pitcher has defeated a club, beside the Tigers, Johnson scored 50 or more victories over the Yankees, Indians and White Sox. The Red Sox enjoyed greater success against Johnson's pitching than any other rival, the Bostons winning 40 and losing 43 games to Johnson, for a percentage of .482.

Carl Mays pitching over a span of nine seasons for the Red Sox and Yankees, won 35 and lost 3 games to the Athletics for a percentage of .921, this being the best continuous performance by a pitcher.

The poorest effort is that by Bryan Harris of the Athletics. Harris has been serving them to the Yankees for five years, in all this time, Harris could register but a single success, this being his victory of June 7th, 1920, when Harris, bested Rip Collins and Bob Shawkey by a single run, in all Harris won a single victory and lost 13 games, for a percentage of .071.

TY COBB'S NEW BATTING RECORD

Ty Cobb, the Detroit Tigers manager, realized his most cherished ambition on Sept. 20th. when he garnered four hits off the combined offerings of George Murray and Jack Quinn. The acquisition of this quartet of hits, gave unto Cobb the undisputed title of making the most hits of any player in the forty-eight years history of Major League baseball.

When the present season began, Ty needed 164 hits to equal the record of Hans Wagner, holder of the most hits record. Wagner secured 3430 hits over a span of 21 years, this against 3440 hits for Cobb in 19 years. Larry Lajoie, ranked second to Wagner, until the 1922 season, when Cobb passed Lajoie.

Only five players enjoy records of banging out three thousand or more hits, as the appended table shows;

Everett Scott of the Yankees is tied with Perry Lipe for the World's consecutive playing record, both have played 1127 games without a miss. Scott, by playing September 24th. with the Yanks will by the undisputed 'IRON MAN OF THE MAJORS' for all time and leagues.

Scott began his streak on June 20th. 1916, and has played every game his team engaged in without a miss.

Lipe began his streak in 1902 with Memphis, and played until 1911, before missing, being with Greenville, Macon and Richmond during his playing streak. Lipe broke his streak because of illness in his family, which called him home.

HOW THE MAJOR LEAGUE CLUB MANAGERS RANKED AS PLAYERS

STAR ball players are often appointed managers, and some make good. But it does not follow that a player need be a star in order to become a successful manager. Here are the major league records of the sixteen club pilots of the major leagues.

John McGraw played his first game for the Baltimore American Association club at Columbus, Ohio, on August 26, 1891, and played his last game with the New York Giants on September 12, 1906. One of McGraw's great feats occurred September 17, 1900, at Brooklyn, when "Wild Bill" Donovan issued four bases on balls and hit one batter. McGraw in five times at the bat received all five gifts from Donovan.

Wilbert Robinson played his first major game with the Athletics of the American Association club, at Philadelphia, Pa., on April 19, 1886, against the pitching of Ed Cushman, who pitched for the Metropolitans. That day "Uncle Wilbert" came through with a single and a stolen base in four batting tries, his team getting only three hits. Robinson caught Ed Kennedy in his first big league contest, having six put-outs, one assist and two errors.

When the Baltimore Orioles fell from the American League, Robbie true to his native city, promptly resumed catching for the Baltimore Eastern League club, donning the mask in 1903 and 1904.

WALTER JOHNSON'S FIRST MAJOR LEAGUE GAME

At Washington, August 2, 1907

Washington vs. Detroit at Washington, August 2—Detroit won both games and went in to first place in the race. In the first game Johnson, the Idaho wonder, made his debut with Washington and pitched a good game. Siever's effectiveness, however, enabled Detroit to win. Score:

Two base hits—Delehanty, Rossman. Three base hit—Nill. Home run—Crawford. Hits off—Johnson 6 in eight innings, Hughes 4 in one inning. Sacrifice hits—Hayden, Blankenship. Stolen bases—Delehanty, Cobb 2, O'Leary. Double play—Cobb, Schmidt; Cobb, Rossman. Left on bases—Washington 6, Detroit 7. First on balls—off Johnson 1, Siever 4. Struck out by Johnson 3, Hughes 2, Siever 7. Umpires—Sheridan and Evans. Time, 1:55.

National League Pitchers' Records, 1923

In arranging the National League pitchers of 1923 in the order of their effectiveness, it was expedient to classify them into three groups, the same arrangement as the past five years. The first group embraces all those who bore the brunt of the campaign and pitched at least ten (10) complete games; the second, those who participated in a minimum of ten (10) games, regardless of the length of same; the third comprises all others who took part in a contest.

RECORD OF NATIONAL LEAGUE PITCHERS WHO PITCHED AT LEAST TEN (10) COMPLETE GAMES IN 1923. BASED ON LOWEST PERCENTAGE OF EARNED RUNS PER NINE (9) INNING GAME.
